Greetings from Bloomfield and from Davis County, Iowa!!

After working with census and county records for several years, and with people searching their family history from all over the United States, you gradually come to realize just how many different families and individuals have "stopped off" in Davis County. Some left their "mark", others you're lucky to find any mention of them anyplace.

This is a damp, chilly evening that is more or less typical of early October. When I was sitting down at the keyboard to write this, I frankly was wondering just exactly what I was going to say from the ideas I had. I just happened to spy a stack of obits, marriages, births, and miscellaneous notes and leaflets each of which has something to do with one of the individuals of my multitudinous extended family in and around Davis County. There are usually several events each week in the Bloomfield Democrat and I pick up items out of the Ottumwa Courier on a routine basis. The ninth generation is being born in Davis County in several of the families. Eventually, I will get them all on PAF and in the sections of the revision of Laplanders and Tulips. It's a lot easier on a computer than the portable Royal typewriter. Of course, in the meantime the pile continues to grow.

Yes, I am one of those that pick up information about a relative, even though I go back to the great-great-great grandparents for the common ancestors. They've all lived here. And many of them have died or are still living here. This brings me back to the first paragraph--a lot of those relatives in those generations have just "stopped off" in Davis County. I know where a number of them went and have "followed them", however, I can appreciate the plight of those researchers who come here looking for any information they can find and hoping to find ONE MORE GENERATION. For you see, I am doing the same thing as I know that 99% of you who read this to the end are doing. JUST DON'T GIVE UP!!

Tips on Preserving Photographs

Helpful tips for preserving your precious documents & memorabilia

By Ivan Hanthorn, for the Iowa Cooperative Preservation Consortium

Photographs are one of the most enjoyable forms of documentary evidence of our lives and the lives and activities of friends and loved ones. And like the people whom they record, they are not permanent. The life expectancy of a photograph is very much a consequence of the care and handling it receives from you.

Tip #1--Storage (in three-part harmony)

*When storing photographic negatives and prints, it is best for each to have its own enclosure, thereby providing physical support and protection. Appropriate envelopes or sleeves can be either paper or plastic, but they must be archival quality. Paper envelopes are opaque but provide a suitable surface for writing information about the photograph; clear plastic enclosures allow viewing of the photo without directly handling it.

*Once housed in appropriate folders, sleeves, or envelopes, photographs are usually best stored flat in archival quality boxes.

*Whenever possible, photos of similar size should be stored together. Enclosures in a box should be the same size and should be the size of the box.

Tip#2--Plastic enclosures

Suitable plastic enclosure materials for photographs are polyester, polypropylene, and polyethylene. (Mylar is a common brand of polyester.) NEVER USE VINYL (polyvinyl-chloride). Image damage will occur. If the plastic type is not identified, do not buy it; unfortunately many readily available plastic photographic enclosures are made of vinyl.

Tip#3--Paper enclosures

Use acid-free, archival quality paper envelopes. Both buffered and non-buffered are acceptable. Do not use brown kraft paper, glassine, or colored paper envelopes.

Tip#4--Albums

If you like the album format for arranging important photographs, purchase an archival quality album, where the paper, the page protectors, and the mounting system are all engineered to protect photographs. Never use so-called magnetic pages, as the photographs will be harmed by the materials used in this product. Use paper or mylar photo corners or pre-slotted pages to mount photos in albums; do not use adhesives.

Tip#5--Handling photographs

Carefully hold photo prints and negatives on the edge or wear cotton gloves when handling photos which you value. The acids in human skin oils will cause permanent damage over time.

Tip#6--Environment

Keep your photograph collection in the best environment you can provide. Do not store them in attics or basements; cracked image surfaces and mold are among the possible consequences.

Tip#7--Preservation product sources

Light Impressions (800-828-6216), University Products (800-628-1912), and Library Binding Service (800-526-5604) are but three companies from which you can obtain appropriate photographic storage materials. Businesses which cater to genealogists also may carry some of these items.
